

Statement on health equity by the civil society organization on the occasion of the 77th Session of the United Nations General Assembly

September 2022

We, representatives of the civil society movements concerned with global health and equity, call upon all government leaders and officials, multilateral organizations, civil society, academia, and the private sector to support the establishment of an international agreement to respond to the ongoing global crisis of unconscionable global and national health inequities, including the effects of climate change. Such an agreement should be grounded in the right to health and core principles like accountability, participation, and equity itself while catalysing enhanced action on the social, environmental, and other determinants of health.

Such an agreement, which would accelerate progress on the 2030 Agenda on Sustainable Development while establishing a human rights - and equity - based framework, could begin to be negotiated even as governments negotiate a pandemic treaty or other international agreement. The pandemic agreement must itself prioritize equity and the right to health and the universal access to health care, ensuring that people receive equal access to vaccines and other countermeasures, no matter where they live.

Meanwhile, we commit ourselves to collaborate in the discussions on both the pandemic agreement and a broader agreement on the right to health and equity, and in their implementation, monitoring, and accountability mechanisms. We further commit to work with WHO and other partners on additional legal tools and actions that they can take to advance health equity and urge that they turn to the Sustainable Health Equity Movement and our organizations in their efforts.
